

Kamesha Smith, MPH

Kamesha Smith, MPH is a recent graduate of Morehouse School of Medicine's Master of Public Health Program where her focus was health administration and policy. Before completing the Environmental Health, Health Services, and Toxicology Research Program, Kamesha also participated in many projects including: University of Alabama at Birmingham's radio drama "Bodylove", Pathways Community Networks' homeless medical surveys, and the National Association of Health Service Executives'

"Everett V. Fox Case Competition". For the past few years, she has devoted countless hours mentoring high school students and volunteering at a homeless outreach center. Her career interests include youth/adolescents, environmental health, health of the homeless population, and emergency preparedness. After completion of her current internship, Kamesha plans to enter the public health career field.